On the basis of a report by the Comptroller and Auditor General (HC 537 1999-2000), the Committee examined the scope for better inspections of gaming and lotteries and for improving the certification and registration process. The arrangements for recovering the costs of regulation from the gaming and lottery industries, and the regulation of gambling on the internet were also considered. The Committee found that: the Gaming Board inspection visits are not based on any formal, systematic assessment of risk and that the Board does not have any measures to determine the efficiency and effectiveness of the visits; the Gaming Board fails to recover the full costs of regulation from the gaming and lottery industries; and, internet gambling is a growing market which is currently outside the scope of much of the UK's regulatory legislation. Recommendations are made to address these concerns although action on gambling on the internet will require international agreement and probably new legislation in the UK.
